My dear Nemesio -

How can I be so slow in replying to your beautiful letter of many months ago? Immediately after receiving it I approached various artists here about contributing prints to a portfolio for the benefit of Taller de Trolley. But my ability to organize the whole project was insufficient and I needed a good kick in the pants.

Now Virginia H. writes that you've organized a new Taller 99 in Bellavista ... can this be the same as the Trolley? I wish I could join you all there. And I hope that it succeeds in every way. I know that your return to Chile has given the art life there great refreshment.

I go on making bronzes and drawings and teaching.
I just began my 36th year of teaching and I have ^{the} feeling that it is enough now. Then a second feeling that I would miss all those kids.

Meme takes the greatest care of her Aunt Meme who has senile dementia and of our three granddaughters (from time to time). Meme's Dad has just turned 90 and won't stop running races (and winning!) and her mother now 80 is ever on the move. They inspire us.

Nick is into his own architectural practice and soon to be the father of a second child. Chris has remarried and is an attorney working on environmental problems.
We don't worry about either of them now.

If you can forgive my delay in writing to you, signal your forgiveness by writing soon.
Love from us both, Paul
